

Mexican earthworms - a checklist of species

Compiled by R.J. Blakemore, COE, SERG, YNU, Japan

December, 2006

Summary

Listed are 104 taxa from Mexico with ratio of endemics to exotics approximately 50:50. Fragoso et al. (1995: Appendix 1) catalogued 47 natives from Mexico while Fragoso (2001: 131, 137) stated there were 93 described Mexican species, 46 natives and 47 exotics most in the defunct "tribes Acanthodrilini (43 spp) and Dichogastrini (40)" plus another 36 or so undescribed species [cf. Huerta et al. (2005) that, without further explanation, puts these taxa in Megascolecidae and Acanthodrilidae]. The current checklist is derived from sources in the Acknowledgements and References given below.

American and Mexican taxa placed by some authors in either Diplotrema Spencer, 1900 or its synonym Eodrilus Michaelsen, 1907, require re-evaluation. Many possibilities exist for generic reallocation (eg. Hegesipyle Kinberg, 1782; Acanthodrilus Perrier, 1872; Notiodrilus Michaelsen, 1899; etc.) but, pending resolution, taxa are provisionally transferred to the earlier genus Microscolex Rosa, 1887 [- see also genera listed in Blakemore (2005; 2006) "Review of Southern Ocean, South Atlantic and Subantarctic species after Lee (1994)".] James (1990) provisionally placed two Mexican species in Diplotrema, viz. D. murchiei and D. papillata, but these and several other Mexican, Belizean, Chilean and Brazilian earthworms (plus the Cuban Acanthodrilus ulrici Michaelsen, 1923) variously placed in Diplotrema, Notiodrilus and/or Eodrilus and more recently in Kaxdrilus Fragoso & Rojas, 1994, also require clarification. The present day distribution of Diplotrema is restricted to northern Australia (i.e., Qld, NT, north-west WA and northern NSW), where species are found in rainforest, woodland, grassland, cultivated soils, and a few moisture retaining refugia in arid areas, and New Zealand (Blakemore, 2002; 2005), whereas those reported from Neotropical region [Mexico, El Salvador, Belize, Cuba, Guatemala by Fragoso et al. (1995: 111)] probably require further clarification as noted above.

Survey Results: Checklist of Mexican species. Family level taxonomy follows Blakemore (2000). Those natives catalogued by Fragoso et al. (1995: Appendix 1) or by Huerta et al. (2005) are marked with a *; all cosmopolitan exotics are described in Blakemore (2002; 2006).

Family Moniligastridae - non native

1. Drawida barwelli (Beddard, 1886) cosmopolitan inc. Mexico [listed by Fragoso pers. comm. (Sept, 2006) as its junior synonym that was imported to Kew Gardens: Moniligaster bahamensis Beddard, 1893].

Family Ocnerodrilidae – some natives, some exotics

1. Eukerria mcdonaldi (Eisen, 1893) from Baja California.
2. Eukerria saltensis (Beddard, 1895) cosmopolitan (including Mexico and Cuba, Rodrigues, 1999), several synonyms.
3. Eukerria zonalis (Eisen, 1893: 311) from Baja California overlooked taxon or synonym.
4. Ocnerodrilus (Ocnerodrilus) occidentalis Eisen, 1878 cosmopolitan; [Gates (1972: 274) considered O. occidentalis to be a parthenogenetically degraded complex and said; “O. beddardi, guatemalae, hendrici, sonorae Eisen, 1893, O. calwoodi Michaelsen, 1898 and O. mexicana Eisen, 1900 are believed to be morphs of occidentalis rather than species”. Many of these names were included in the genus Ilyogenia characterized by spermathecal pores in 8/9; but its type species, Ilyogenia africana Beddard, 1893, is probably a merely thecate morph of O. occidentalis, suggesting this genus should be combined. Ilyogenia comondui Eisen, 1900 is claimed as a further synonym of O. occidentalis by Fragoso (pers. comm. Sept. 2006)].
5. **Phoenicodrilus taste* Eisen, 1895 from Baja California and other regions of Mexico, sometimes inhabiting bromeliads. [Fragoso (pers. comm. Sept. 2006) includes Phoenicodrilus tepicensis Eisen, 1896 and Ocnerodrilus santixavieri Eisen, 1900 in synonymy].
